The Fourth in that Neighbor od - Ravages of the Plant Louse - Harvest Progressing -

WELLSBURG, July 5.

Correspondence of the Intelligencer.

The Fourth came and passed off quietly. There was nothing here in the shape of picnics or celebrations. Some few of our citizens went to Brown's Island and Mahon's Grove. The day was very warm. The heavy rais with which Wheeling and vicinity was favored on the after-noon and evening of the 3d did not reach bere. It was in sight and its thunder ings could be heard distinctly. At the me, the wind here was blowing from the time, the wind here was blowing from the the morth, right against the rain. The morning of the Fourth opened up dry and warm, and people who had nothing to do stayed in the shade and those who were anywise engaged did as little as the circumstances would allow. The mercury varied according to locality. In one place, about noon-time, it indicated 98 degrees in the rhade. Shortly after noon the welcome clouds put in their appearance, accompanied with pesis of thunder, which continued until near six o'clock P. M. raining in the meantime all inunder, which continued until near six o'clock P. M. raining in the meantime all around us, but not a drop here. At the time mentioned a very heavy rain was noticed in the north bearing east, south east, which finally reached us in the shape of a gentle shower and kept up at intervals during the night. Many a gratified heart returned thanks unto film who rules over all for the plenteous and life giving rains.

INSECT RAVAGES.

INSECT RAVAGES.

The plant louse is playing and hovic with most every thing that it attacks, potato vines especially. Those that inlest the currant and goosberry bushes devour the leaves, those on the top of potatoe and other vines appearently sting them, causing them to turn ryelloy and die.

Hellebore, I or to one quart of boiling water, (allow to stand until cool, then turn into a patent bucket or pail of water and apply to the under side of the leaves and stalks with a broom after the fashon of sprinkling) will kill them. Tobscoo juice is being tried, we hear it suggested to take soft corn broom and aweep them off, after which they will not return.

CROFS AND FRUITS.

The past week has been good for corn and ripening the grain. The rain of yesterday will be of immense value to the corn. Cherries have not been as plenty for twenty years—150 per gallon. PITTSBURGH SUNDAY LEADER. There were bills scattered over town last Saturday statiog that the Pittaburgh Sunday Leader would be on sale in Lagrange ("our Botany Bay") on Sunday, and the skiff "Leader" would carry all those who were thirsting to digest the "spicy Wellaburg letter" to and from Lagrange free of charge. The papers came, and in the absence of a policeman, whom the Mayor had placed at the wharf, a boy landed there and disposed of a few copies. The regular agent here refused to receive them. That "spicy letter" is pronounced a failure.

John being a native of this city, and having spent most of his life here, was well known to our citizens. At an early age he developed a taste, indeed we may say a genius for music, and became a pupil of Mr. James Rigby on the violin. After only a few months' pupilage, we heard him perform a very difficult accompaniment to the piano at a concert in St. Matthew's Church in so masterly a manner as to elicit the praise of some of our best musicians. His proficiency on the violin has since become well known. He also devoted his attention to piano and vocal music. Possessing a fine tenor voice, he became a necessary part in the social evening gatherings of the quartette, and appeared to epicy such entertainments as only those who have a supper at times to excite uneasiness in the mind of his father, who watched his health with the greatest vigilance, but he grew to manhood without any serious liberacy education at our Public Schools, and Institute, he was sent to the Polytechnic school at Worcester, Mass, where he remained for two years, intending by this special course to fit himself for an intumate scientific knowledge of the nature and composition of ores and metals, more particularly iron. In his social reparticularly iron ture and composition of ores and metals, more particularly iron. In his social re-lations there was a buoyancy of spirit and amiability that gave life and spirit to an evening company; and he carried these characteristics with him in his business For several years past he has been Sec-retary of the Ohio Valley Iron Works at Moundsville, where he was thrown into communication with its operatives, who

Persons and Injury of Others, itsburgh Dispatch of Yesterday. One of the most terrible disasters that ever occurred in this vicinity took place yesterday afternoon about four o'clock at the Sugar Camp, on the Ross farm, whereby seven persons lost their lives, and about nine were badly wounded. The circumstances are as follows: Four picnic parties are from the Comment of the co nic parties one from the German Lu-

The former, the German Lutheran, participated in their festivities in the midst of the old Sugar Camp, a short distance from the others.

It was soon exting under the best of the church, and but little the pastor of the church, Rev. Charles chase a fire engine, or form several lad-

A number from the German Lutheran Church sought shelter from the storm in a large, covered grocery wagon, owned by Mr. Courad Keithmiller, the horse having been detached. The wagon stood by a large sugar tree, probably three feet in diameter two feet from the roots. They had no sooner got safely within it when the storm broke over it with renewed fary. A thunderbolt struck the tree, splitting it, and the hurricane assisted in breaking it off at the roots. It fell with a terrible crash on to the wagon, smashing it to atoms, and killing almost instantly nearly every person inside and badly injuring the others. At the same time several large trees in the immediate vicinity were prostrated in various directions, falling upon children, who were not quick enough to escape from under them.

It is singular more were not killed or injured. The rsin was so heavy and the lightning so vivid, fissh after fissh following each other in rapid succession, that the children, and even the older once, were so frightened, and almost blinded, that they could scarcely see before them. The rain was so heavy and the lightning so vivid, flash after flash following each other in rapid succession, that the children, and even the older ones, were so frightened, and almost blinded, that they could carcely see before them. They became bewildered and ran they knew not whither. Preacher Walts, who was injured himself, though not seriously, attempted at first to check the panic that ensued, but finding his efforts in vain, became himself wild with excitement, and was subsequently removed from the grove, after the atorm had abated, to his residence at Sharpsburg, where at last accounts his mental condition was such that his friends were compelled to watch him, fearing he might do himself injury. The death of his son Ludwig, nine years old who was one of the number killed in the wagon, was reported in his presence, but he failed to comprehend the sad news. In fact his mind was gone.

When the fatal result of the storm had been announced, Joseph Holtsbeimer, the undertaker of Sharpsburg, who was in the grove, had the corpees taken to his undertaking rooms, some of which were subsequently removed to other localities in the town. The news spread like wildfire, and in a short time a number of wagons and other conveyances were sent from Sharpsburg to the scene of disaster, and the wounded conveyed to their various homes.

A slight rain last night caused vegetation to look this morning as though it had a new lease of life, but the intense heat this afternoon (the thermometer standing at 96° in the shade) is causing everything in that line to droop again and the effects of the rain seem entirely counteracted. Business will generally be suspended with us tomorrow, and all will seek the coolgrove and least from the well filled basket, both and least from the well filled bases, both at noon and in the evening, and then go home, the old folks more weary than they have been for many a day, and the chidren sick from eating too many sweetmeats.
